SUMMARY

The Typology of French-language Schools is a descriptive tool composed of five statistical analyses that capture the current reality of the dynamic, changing school situation in francophone Ontario. The goal of this document is to orient the work of various services within TVOntario.

An examination of the French-language school registration figures for September 1988 reveals that Ontario's francophones experience a diverse range of scholastic circumstances. Students were registered in 363 French-language schools — public or separate schools, unilingual French or mixed-language schools (in these students at the same school are grouped by language in separate modules or instructional units). The language composition of the boards, too, may vary: a unilingual French-language school may be a member of any one of 73 boards, which may, in turn, be either homogeneous (that is, unilingual French-speaking) or mixed-language — with either a majority or minority of students registered in French-language schools. All in all, 11 different types of school situations have been identified through analysis of the 1988 data, which have been reconfigured to take into account changes in school structure as of 1989.

The section entitled "Historical Overview" outlines the legislation that affected or continues to have an impact on the current administrative situation of French-language schools. "School Structures in Evolution" summarizes the changes experienced by French-language schools between September 1988 and September 1989.

The section entitled "Typology" describes the relations between schools and boards. It provides a visual schema of French-language school structures, listing the different types of school and providing an index of schools according to type. This section of the work will be of interest to those with questions regarding school structure.

"The Inventory of School Boards according to Degree of Linguistic Isolation" lists school boards in ascending order of proportion of students registered in French-language schools as compared to the total registrations in the respective boards. Also indicated is the proportion of the French-speaking population within the municipality or county in which the school board is located. Read together, these two listings can suggest paths of development for TVOntario activities, such as workshops (perhaps organized cooperatively with boards) on the use of educational television. This index makes clear which school boards have experienced considerable change in linguistic composition between 1988 and 1989.

The next section, the "Inventory of School Boards and their Schools," lists those boards that offer mother-tongue French instruction (to be distinguished from boards offering only immersion classes) and the number of French mother-tongue students within each board. Data in this section were derived from school registration figures of September 1988 as applied to the new school structures of September 1989.

The "Inventory of Schools by Region and by Grade Level" lists according to region the various schools that offer French-language instruction, indicating their size and the boards to which they belong. This index may be useful in orienting the work of the various services of La Chaîne, as well as the Communications and Client Services departments.

In creating a picture of the demographic, administrative, and legislative factors affecting French-language education in Ontario, this document may serve as background for TVOntario's ongoing development of programming and services for the Franco-Ontarian community.

RÉSUMÉ

La Typologie des écoles de langue française est un outil descriptif composé de cinq analyses statistiques qui fixent pour le moment la réalité dynamique et changeante de la situation scolaire en Ontario francophone. Elle a pour but d'orienter le travail de divers services de TVOntario.

L'analyse des inscriptions dans les écoles françaises de l'Ontario en septembre 1988 révèle une vaste gamme de situations scolaires. On retrouve des élèves dans 363 écoles de langue française, et ces écoles sont séparées ou publiques, unilingues ou mixtes (regroupant des élèves dans des modules distincts de langue anglaise et de langue française, à l'intérieur du même établissement scolaire). Les écoles de langue française sont rattachées à 73 conseils scolaires homogènes ou mixtes, les conseils mixtes ayant une majorité ou une minorité d'élèves inscrits dans leurs écoles de langue française. On retrouve effectivement onze types distincts de situation scolaire si on regarde les données de 1988 à la lumière des structures mises sur pied en septembre 1989.

La section intitulée « Historique » offre une perspective législative pour mieux situer l'actualité administrative des écoles de langue française. « Structures scolaires en évolution » donne un résumé des changements effectués dans les écoles de langue française entre septembre 1988 et septembre 1989.

La section intitulée « Typologie » décrit les rapports entre les écoles et les conseils scolaires. Elle offre un schéma visuel des structures scolaires de langue française. Elle énumère les différents types d'écoles et offre l'inventaire des écoles selon le type. Cette section du travail est d'intérêt pour ceux qui s'interrogent sur les structures scolaires.

L'« Inventaire des conseils scolaires selon le facteur d'isolement linguistique » énumère les conseils par ordre croissant selon la proportion que représentent les élèves inscrits dans des établissements de langue française par rapport à l'ensemble des inscriptions dans leurs conseils respectifs. On y retrouve également la proportion de la population de langue française de la municipalité ou du comté dans lequel le conseil est situé. Regroupés, les deux indices peuvent suggérer des pistes de développement éventuel, surtout en ce qui concerne les ateliers ou les activités coopératives avec les conseils scolaires sur l'utilisation de la télévision éducative. Cette liste met en évidence les conseils dont la composition linguistique a considérablement changé suite aux mutations d'écoles en 1988 et 1989. De plus amples renseignements à ce propos se trouvent dans la section « Structures scolaires en évolution. »

L'« Inventaire des conseils scolaires et de leurs écoles constituantes » est un répertoire des conseils offrant un enseignement en langue maternelle française (à distinguer des conseils n'offrant que des classes d'immersion). On y retrouve la proportion des effectifs scolaires de langue maternelle française dans chaque conseil. La composition linguistique a été établie en fonction des inscriptions scolaires de septembre 1988. Ces données ont été appliquées aux nouvelles structures scolaires de septembre 1989.

L'« Inventaire des écoles selon la région et les années d'études » présente une liste des écoles tout en indiquant leur taille et les conseils scolaires auxquels elles appartiennent. Les données de cet inventaire serviront à orienter le travail de divers services de La Chaîne, ainsi que le Service des communications et le Service à la clientèle.

En offrant le portrait des facteurs démographiques, administratifs et législatifs touchant à l'éducation en français en Ontario, ce document pourra servir de base à la planification continue des divers secteurs de TVOntario qui offrent des services et une programmation destinés à la communauté franco-ontarienne.

INTRODUCTION

Objectives

There is no simple, comprehensive description of French-language education in Ontario, since the specifics of the situation vary from one school to the next. While it is tempting to group together the relatively small number of schools for Franco-Ontarians and generalize about the educational circumstances experienced by the province's francophone students, such a generalization would be a misleading and inaccurate representation of the complex, multivarious reality.

French-language schools can fit into several categories. They can be either public or separate, belong to school boards with few or many other French-language schools, offer either homogeneous French-language or mixed-language instruction (that is, provide education for English and French speakers, but in separate modules or instructional units), experience varying degrees of linguistic or cultural isolation, be large or small. All this is by way of saying that an analysis of the various components of the French-speaking students' scholastic situations is necessary to a full understanding of their complex circumstances.

The objective of the Typology of French-language schools is to provide a descriptive tool for planning programming and services by creating this kind of detailed, specific analysis. The section entitled "Typology" outlines the relations between the schools and their boards and will be useful, for example, in pinpointing mixed-language schools or large French-language schools within predominantly anglophone school boards — in other words, boards that might well benefit from the information and support that TVOntario can offer. In addition, by identifying the variety of possible links between boards and schools, this section of the report demonstrates the impact that changes in legislation have had and are still having on the French-speaking educational infrastructure.

The inventories that accompany the typology aim to facilitate the work of various sectors of TVOntario, such as Programming, Utilization, Communications, and Client Services. The "Inventory of School Boards according to Degree of Linguistic Isolation" indicates where French-speaking populations are isolated within their communities or within their mixed-language boards, thus perhaps suggesting foci for creating and promoting culturally supportive educational series. The "Inventory of School Boards and their Schools" extends the possibility of targeted contact between TVOntario and schools by identifying the member schools in the particular boards. Another approach for identifying the schools to work with is offered by the "Inventory of Schools by Region and by Grade Level." This document also aims to advance the analysis and planning of the various research departments of TVOntario: Evaluation and Project Research, Audience Research, and Planning and Development Research.

Methodology

This report is based on statistical information relating exclusively to French-language schools and to French-language modules of mixed-language schools. In mixed schools, French-language instruction is provided for francophone students, and English-language instruction is also offered. Because this document concerns the schools and modules for mother-tongue French speakers, immersion schools are not considered.

The information on school registrations for the 1988-89 school year (the most recent available at the time of statistical analysis) was prepared by the ministry of Education, Information Services and Resources Unit, from the September 1988 reports submitted by school principals across Ontario. The ministry information gives registration figures by grade level for each French-language school or module. It lists the school boards, their status (public or separate) and geographical region, as well as the total registration by grade level for all the schools in the board.

Between September 1988 and September 1989, as the result of the implementation of new legislation, many schools went through changes in status or affiliation. For example, all French schools, public and separate, in the Ottawa-Carleton boards were reorganized into a single unilingual French school board. In Toronto, something similar took place on a smaller scale when the French-language schools and modules of the public boards of Toronto, North York, and Etobicoke joined together to form the Metropolitan Toronto French-Language School Council. In this instance, a module (the French-language section of Jarvis Collegiate Institute) became an autonomous school retaining some ties with Jarvis, with which it continues to share space. Other changes occurred when a certain number of schools, particularly in the east, changed school board, that is, when public schools became separate schools.

To ensure that this report is accurate and up to date, the ministry's statistical data of September 1988 have been reconfigured throughout this report to reflect these 1989 changes. A list of the new relationships between schools relationships between schools and school boards appears in the section entitled "Changing Structures in the School System."

The data on demographic issues, regional distribution of the French-speaking population, and the total population of municipalities and counties were provided by the Office of Francophone Affairs [1].

From the statistical reports and documents indicated above a new data bank was created and then developed into the series of descriptive tables that comprise the central core of this report. Schools were categorized in various ways: for example, according to administrative type (public or separate), degree of isolation, region, and grade taught. In this way, the schools emerge in a new perspective, offering a multidimensional portrait of the various situations experienced by French-speaking students in Ontario.

HISTORICAL OVERVIEW

To understand fully the present situation of francophone schools and boards in Ontario, it is necessary to examine the history of legislation concerning French-language education. Among the documents consulted were those by Tremblay [2], Churchill [3], Gilbert [4], and Bordeleau [5].

Laws Relating to French-Language Instruction

In 1912, at which time 6,968 schools existed in the province, including 355 bilingual elementary schools [6], the government adopted Regulation 17. This regulation prohibited French-language instruction after grade 2 and permitted a maximum of one hour a day of instruction of French in subsequent grades. Schools previously considered bilingual were thus required to become English-language schools under the jurisdiction of English-language boards. For all practical purposes, francophone education in Ontario disappeared. All that remained were private schools to which only a small minority of the French-speaking population had access.

After the repeal of Regulation 17 in 1927, bilingual elementary separate schools developed anew. But because there were no French-language public secondary schools, "a francophone had only one-sixth of the chance of a non-francophone to move successfully from grade 9 to grade 13" [7]. As they had no educational infrastructure, Franco-Ontarians either studied in their second language, which put them at a disadvantage, or curtailed their studies at the end of grade 10, the last year in which separate schools offered French-language instruction. As a result, Franco-Ontarians had a heritage of undereducation as compared to English-speaking Ontarians.

It wasn't until 1968 that the enactment of Bills 140 and 141 assured francophones the right to French-language instruction from kindergarten through to the end of their university education. This right was somewhat limited by the fact that separate school funding ended after grade 10, but "starting in 1969, the French-language public secondary school officially saw the light of day and began gradually to take root in the province, either by the modification of private French-language schools into public schools or by the pure and simple creation of new schools" [8]. Bill 30, passed in 1986, guaranteed the financial support of francophone separate school education through grade 13/OAC.

The ramifications of the legislation governing the rights to instruction in French can still be seen today. For example, examination of the data pertaining to the September 1988 registrations reveals that the proportion of registrations in separate and public schools at the secondary level is the reverse of that at the elementary level, where longer-standing funding provisions have allowed many francophones to opt for a Catholic education.

Registration patterns in French-language schools in Ontario, September 1988

Elementary level	separate schools	90.5 %	public schools	9.4 %
Secondary level	separate schools	35.8 %	public schools	64.2 %

It was not until the 1989-1990 school year that the impact of Bill 30 became apparent. When the registration information of September 1988 is reconfigured to reflect 1989 realities, it is clear that the divergence in separate school registration between the elementary and secondary levels diminishes markedly in 1989.

September 1988 data applied to the school situations in September 1989

Elementary level	separate schools	90.5 %	public schools	9.4 %
Secondary level	separate schools	62.5%	public schools	37.5 %

The movement toward separate secondary schools is growing. This trend should be followed in order to determine whether it is the result of a philosophical shift or whether it is simply a move to consolidate schools within school boards with a larger French-language majority.

Laws Affecting the Governance of French-language Instruction

To the laws affecting the right to French-language education and school financing must be added those determining school governance. Previously, school boards were not required to create French-language schools in their jurisdiction. "A minority within the greatest proportion of school districts, Francophones were for a long time subject to the good will of anglophone school administrators for the creation of services in their own language" [9].

French-language advisory committees (known as the comités consultatifs de langue française or C.C.L.F.) were created in 1968 to consult with school boards, as their name indicates, rather than to manage or govern. While these committees did not offer a means of active participation in board decisions, they assured a francophone presence at the school board level. The creation of a French-language advisory committee was required once requested by ten ratepayers in a school district.

Bills 180 and 181 were adopted in 1973 to expand the power of the advisory committees and to provide a system of arbitration through the Languages of Instruction Commission of Ontario. But it was Bill 75 on school governance, adopted in 1986 and in effect today, that established the necessary conditions for the setting up of French- or English-language sections in boards that contain at least one module of the minority language. The section of the board thus created has exclusive jurisdiction in certain areas: specifically, in the planning, creation, administration, and shutting down of the school units they govern.

Under Bill 75, other issues continue to be governed by the school board as a whole, including, for example, decisions on capital expenditure of resources shared between the schools of the two linguistic groups, such as a board level resource centre. Obviously, the exclusively consultative role available to francophones through the C.C.L.F. has been expanded by the provision for the creation of French-language sections — a step toward self-governance.

As a result of Bill 75 two uniligual francophone school boards were created: the Ottawa-Carleton French-language School Board and the Metropolitan Toronto French-Language School Council. In other regions, work is underway to create new homogeneous school boards: in the united counties of Prescott-Russell a new unilingual French board is expected, while the possibility of French boards is being studied for the schools in Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry, in Essex, in the Niagara Region, in Simcoe County, in Penetaguishene, and in Sudbury [10].

On 16 March 1990, a Supreme Court decision made the headlines:

> Court backs French control of own schools
> In a landmark decision on minority-language education rights, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled yesterday that francophone parents in Edmonton have the right to manage and control their own publicly financed French-language schools [11].

Despite this achievement, the creation of new unilingual francophone school boards is advancing more slowly than the Franco-Ontarian community would wish:

> There was bitter disappointment at the meeting of the Association of French-language School Boards of Ontario (the Congrès de l'Association française des conseils scolaires de l'Ontario or AFCSO) last Saturday, in Ottawa. The francophone board officials were told that the Peterson government wishes to continue consultations on French-language school governance, keeping in mind the Mahé judgment recently handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada .... Board officials were hoping that the deputy minister of Education, Raymond Chenier, would announce that the government was preparing to create French-language school boards throughout Ontario. Instead of this, Mr. Chenier asked the officials to be patient a little longer [12].

The creation of new unilingual francophone school boards is thus a development to follow closely.

CHANGING STRUCTURES IN THE SCHOOL SYSTEM

As noted above, the school registration figures on which this document is based describe the distribution of students in French-language schools in September 1988, as reported by the school principals in their September reports submitted to the Ministry of Education. The composition of many school boards changed significantly during the 1988-89 school year. For example, some French-language schools changed board affiliation and joined separate school boards. Others united to form homogenous French-language school boards.

Table 3, below, indicates the specific changes in board affiliation that are taken into account throughout this report. In all listings, the administrative affiliation of these schools is represented as that in effect in September 1989, while registration information remains that of September 1988. Schools that did not appear in the reports of September 1988 are not included in this document.

- All the French-language schools of Ottawa-Carleton — 12 public schools and 40 separate schools — joined together to form the new Ottawa-Carleton French-language School Board.

- In Toronto, five French-language public schools in North York, Etobicoke, and Toronto united to form the Metropolitan Toronto French-Language School Council.

By changing school board affiliation, these schools have without exception increased the strength of the francophone voice at the board level. This change is an important step toward self-governance in matters of education, already in embryo in the form of the French-language sections. In addition, these changes have consolidated the linguistic and cultural reality of the schools concerned, with all that that might contribute, for example, to greater interschool contacts and exchange of information on board-wide professional development days, or to the acquisition of pedagogical material and tools.

The following inventory makes clear the demographic consequences of these changes. The schools are grouped by school board; the percentage of the boards' student body that is French mother tongue (FMT) is listed for both 1988 and 1989. Thus the impact of the changes in board affiliation — particularly those of the schools of Ottawa-Carleton and the Toronto Urban Community — is clearly profiled. (Note, too, that the 1988 board affiliation for these two new homogeneous boards is found in parenthesis following the listing of the 1989 affiliation.) For example, the proportion of francophone students in the four boards to which the Ottawa-Carleton schools belonged in 1988 varied from 5.76 percent to 38.38 percent, while within the new board, it is 100 percent. These statistics underscore the diversity of school situations experienced by francophone students of a single community before the creation of the new boards.

TYPOLOGY

A cursory look at Ontario's overall registration figures demonstrates why the province's French-language schools are generally considered as a block. They are without a doubt a minority within the system: of the 1,857,921 students registered in 1988-89, only 95,619 (5.14 percent) went to French-language schools. But it is clear that the registration figures do not represent a qualitatively uniform school experience, but rather an assortment of many types of schools, varying in level of teaching, in religious affiliation (or lack thereof), and in linguistic composition.

Registration in French-language schools, 1988-89

	Elementary schools	Secondary Schools
Unilingual schools	69,212	22,931
Mixed schools	1,044	2,432
Total	70,256	25,363

The province's 95,600 francophone students are registered in four basic kinds of schools: mixed-language schools, both public and separate, and unilingual schools, both public and separate. Mixed-language schools are those that offer an education either in English or in French, but in separate modules or instructional units. But these categories must be subdivided when one takes into consideration the composition of the school boards to which French-language schools belong: boards, too, may be public, separate, or joint as well as unilingual or mixed language. The goal of this document is to offer a framework that permits a better understanding of these various situations, and that allows TVOntario to reach out to French-speaking students with some understanding of their various school situations.

Tables 5 and 6 outline francophone school structures and the relations between the schools and their boards. The type of school indicated in these tables is elaborated in the descriptions of the 11 types of school situations encountered by francophones in Ontario; these descriptions follow the tables, and are in turn followed by an inventory of schools by structural type.

INVENTORY OF SCHOOL BOARDS ACCORDING TO DEGREE OF LINGUISTIC ISOLATION

The following inventory presents school boards in ascending order of percentage of French mother-tongue school registrations in the board as a whole. This proportion was established from the data of the September 1988 Report of the Ministry of Education, as reconfigured according to the new school and board situations of September 1989. The inventory also lists the percentage of French mother-tongue speakers in the municipality or county in which the board is located. The 1986 Statistics Canada census is the basis for this information, which indicates the whole francophone population, not simply that of school age. The school boards in bold face are those that experienced changes between 1988 and 1989 (see the section entitled "Changing Structures in the School System" for further details on these changes).

Read together, the two analyses of isolation within the boards and communities can suggest possible activities (such as workshops on the effective use of educational television) that TVOntario might develop to meet the schools' needs. For example, in Hamilton, the percentage of francophone representation in the community's school boards is about equal to that of its representation in the municipality: 1 to 2 percent, indicating a high level of isolation in both the school system and the community. Francophone populations in situations like this would profit greatly from such linguistic and cultural support as TVOntario could offer.

The situation in the district of Nipissing tells another story. There, 30.81 percent of the population is francophone — a proportion significant enough to form the basis for an active francophone community. In Nipissing's public school system, however, francophones comprise only 1.88 percent of the student population. So while these students may enjoy the benefits of the community's socio-linguistic support, their minority status in the public school system could indicate a situation of isolation that would benefit from video-based support from TVOntario. It's worth noting that within the Nipissing separate school board 59.01 percent of those registered are francophone. This higher francophone concentration would enhance professional development within the board and suggest that the board as a whole is conscious of the particular needs of the French-speaking population.

INVENTORY OF SCHOOL BOARDS AND THEIR SCHOOLS

The inventory of school boards and of their member schools indicates the percentage of French mother-tongue registrants in each board and lists the grades taught at each school. This linguistic composition was established from the school registrations of September 1988, which were subsequently applied to the new school structures of September 1989.

In the case of the Metropolitan Toronto French-Language School Council, for example, the September 1988 registration figures for the French-language public schools of Toronto and North York were isolated. These schools were then grouped together, with their student registrations, in the new French-language council, and this board's percentage of students in French-language schools was then calculated (an easy task, given that this is a homogeneous board). The Prescott and Russell Roman Catholic Separate School Board offers another example: included within the index of French speakers in this board are those students who in 1988 were registered in public schools that, as of September 1989, became part of the separate school board.

OBSERVATIONS

It is clear that the school situation of francophones in Ontario reflects both the political climate and the legislative history of the province. When education in French was prohibited, as it was in 1912 with Regulation 17, French-language educational institutions disapeared completely — with the exception of private schools, to which access was limited. On the other hand, when legislation made French-language instruction possible, demand was great and francophone schools grew to the limits of the law to meet this need. Following the enactment of Bills 140 and 141 in 1968, French-language secondary schools were established in the public system. Then, with the passing of Bill 30 in 1986, which guaranteed the financing of separate schools through grade 13, the growth of French-language secondary schools within the separate boards accelerated.

A parallel situation exists with school governance. Following the passing of Bill 75 in 1986, two homogeneous French-speaking boards were created in Toronto and Ottawa in 1989, and work is underway to establish others.

The section of this report entitled "Typology" makes clear that at this time the most common relation between school and board is that of a unilingual separate school within a mixed-language board of French-speaking majority: 161 of 363 schools are of this type, described in this report as type 1. However, what is also abundantly clear is how changeable the Ontario political climate is in matters of education — the effects of this mutability are felt in the changes of school situations between 1988 and 1989. Organizational structures continue to shift: following the example of the French-speaking schools of Ottawa-Carleton, other type 1 schools are likely to organize themselves into homogeneous boards. As unilingual francophone school boards and French-speaking sections of mixed-language boards develop, Franco-Ontarians have a greater say in their own education. In matters of self-governance, more changes are likely following the April 1990 Supreme Court decision, which offers some confirmation on the federal level of what had already been developing at the provincial level with Bill 75.

In creating a picture of the demographic, administrative, and legislative factors affecting French-language education in Ontario, this document may serve as background for TVOntario's ongoing development of programming and services for the Franco-Ontarian community.
